In conversation with Ambassador Alphand at the Netherlands Embassy dinner on November 7, he made the following points:

1. De Gaulle understands fully why the Cuba crisis had to be handled without consultation, but this technique could not work in a Berlin crisis.
2. We should move as soon as we can on the problem of political consultation; and the initiative for it should come from Washington.
3. Paris is prepared to accept Washington as the locus of consultation and is also prepared to accept West Germany as an equal of the Big Three.
4. We should not follow the British line of "rushing to Moscow" with offers to negotiate on Berlin, non-diffusion, etc., but should go about our business in the Free World awaiting initiatives, if any, from Moscow.

5. He
